
Media Strategist, Communications Professional, Television Personality and Civic/Community Volunteer

“I believe media is one of the greatest platforms to make a difference – and this is why I work in the media industry”

Windia Dieudonne is a media strategist and communications professional whose focus on delivering results driven insight based on sold marketing research is helping her to quickly advance the corporate ladder.

Her career in media began with an interest in broadcast television, specifically in the area of business entertainment and later broadened to media sales. A well-rounded professional she has experience working in television, radio, marketing, digital advertising, research, production and social media. She currently works as a Research Analyst at Katz Media where she develops customized marketing solutions for clients by providing analytical insight and market research for local and national stations; and works as a Social Media Strategist for South Orange Maplewood (SOMA-TV) cable television station.

Her broadcast career began in college where she interned as a production assistant. She later interned for Black Entertainment Television where she worked on 106 & Park, the network’s longest running and only live show, WABC-TV and ABC Network on their hit show, “The View” where she served as talent assistant to hosts Elisabeth Hasselbeck and Joy Behar. Her varied experience led to honed skills both behind the camera as a videographer, production assistant and content creator and in-front of the camera as a host. As a media personality, she was a guest host for SOMA-TV’s cable show “Community Corner” and is currently the host and producer of SOMA-TV’s, “Meet the Artists.” She also offers commentary as a guest host on blogtalkradio.com show, L.E.A.R.N for Life a weekly broadcast that focuses on wellness, personal and professional development and social and cultural issues. At Kean University, she served as a DJ/Host for campus radio station, WKNJ and was the Coordinator of the Purple Violet Film Festival.

Fueled by a passion for social change and socio-cultural issues she works as a civic and community volunteer and serves in various organizations. She is currently a proud board member of the United Nations Association-Young Professionals (UNA-YP) and is a member of the International Radio & Television Society Foundation. Windia is also a long-time volunteer with All Stars Project, a Newark, NJ based not-for-profit focused on providing educational and performing arts outreach programming for inner-city youth; and recently started working with the National Association of Haitian Professionals (NAHP), an organization that is dedicated to assisting and developing Haitian Professionals in the Diaspora.

She holds a Bachelor's Degree in Media & Film from Kean University and an Associate's Degree from Essex County College in Mass Communications. Windia was born in Haiti and speaks fluent Creole and French.
